Play Therapy with Military Families

Children in Military Families are a unique population for Play Therapists. Due to deployment of parents, moves and the military lifestyle children face frequent loss and restructuring of their family system. Families face new unknown challenges leading to anxiety for both children and parents. Using videos of a military family with a deployed father we will explore the use of different Play Therapy theories and interventions with individual family members, dyads and the family as a whole.

Learning Objectives:

1. Understand how the military lifestyle impacts children and families and how to adapt Play Therapy skills for that lifestyle.
2. Be able to identify and respond to military lifestyle related play themes, developmental issues and loss factors during play therapy.
3. Learn directed and non-directed play therapy techniques that help children and families cope and thrive.
4. Receive information about resources that are available for families that will enhance and supplement Play Therapy.

Workshop Presenters:

Linda has a unique perspective regarding Military Families as she was born at West Point at the Military Academy, lived overseas as a child and experienced grief while her father was deployed. Linda teaches workshops and classes and as Registered Play Therapist-Supervisor she offers individual and group supervision.

Jeri has spent her adult life around the military. During their 27 year Army career, she and her husband raised four children through 14 moves (2 overseas) and 6 deployments. She spent several years doing parent workshops for the Military Child Education Coalition and has been a Military and Family Life Counselor (MFLC) at Ft. Carson. Jeri is a Registered Play therapist and has a private practice in Woodland Park.
